The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-7 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kovacs et al in view of Battersby et al 6,546,924.

Kovacs shows a ball hurling machine including a body having a hurling mechanism; and a control plate 2 having buttons and a transmitter to send signals to a receiver on the machine body to select various modes of ball hurling. However, it is not clear if there is a display on the body to signal to a user the status of the ball hurling activity; such display would be useful to allow the user to prepare for the ball. For example, Battersby shows that a ball hurling machine may include a display including colored lights 112, 114 to signal information about a ball about to be thrown. One would find it obvious to include this display on the machine of Kovacs.

With regard to claim 3, the control plate and machine of Kovacs are connected wirelessly; but connecting these with wires would be considered an obvious modification, for example to reduce radio interference. With regard to claims

4, 5, & 7, the plate is of a size and shape that it could serve as "home base", be hung on a wall, or be held by hand.
